

Are House Cleaning Services Tax Deductible?

Do you work at home most of the time? With busy days ahead of you, hiring cleaning and maid services is something you do regularly. Even though you are almost always at home, you rarely have time to clean, so instead, you ask for assistance from trusted house cleaning services. Reliable, trustworthy, and efficient professional house cleaners will do a great job cleaning your indoor space.

You schedule an appointment and hire them to clean not only your home office, but also the entire house. You are happy with their service and since now you use their service regularly, home cleaning services become a part of your whole home expense. You then hear that after switching to working at home (home-business), you are probably entitled to some tax deductions. The question is: are house cleaning services one of them?

Is House Cleaning Service One of the Expenses You Can Deduct From Your Home-Based Business?

No matter you're a home-based business or whether you work as a freelancer, the IRS recognizes you have costs for running a business at home. With that, they allow you to deduct some expenses from your tax. In that case, before you prepare and file your tax return, you want to take a closer look into your home costs, any of them can be possible deductions that apply to your business.

Are Home Cleaning Services Tax Deductible? Yes!

There are plenty of home costs you can deduct from your tax return, including home security system, phone charges, office supplies, equipment and cleaning services among many. With your question whether home cleaning services are tax deductible in the US, the answer is yes. If you have your entire home cleaned along with your home office area, you can have this deducted from your tax return.

You can deduct your home cleaning service cost simply by using the equivalent percentage of your home office to that of your entire home. Even if you only have your entire home office area cleaned, IRS allows you to deduct the entire amount of the cleaning service. This along with other costs in your home office will help you reduce your tax return in considerable amount.

Home Cleaning Services Help Your Home Office Stay Clean and Save You on Tax

Seeing that home cleaning services can help you more than simply ensuring your home office stays clean, it goes to say that this is a worthwhile expense. Cleanliness and orderliness is essential for your productivity and at the same time, it saves you time to focus on more important things like work and family. More than that, the fact that you can deduct it from your tax return, it's an added benefit.
